The Masai Mara offers good bird-watching any month of the year, but the best time is from November to April when the migrants from Europe and north Africa arrive. This coincides with the Wet season when many species can be seen in breeding plumage. June to October is the Dry season, and tends to be best for general wildlife viewing.

Bird watching in the Maasai Mara. Posted on 24 January, 2014 by Encounter Mara in Wildlife | Comment Posted: January 24, 2014. The Maasai Mara is more famous for its amazing wildlife than its avian assets, but the reserve features a number of habitats conducive to great bird watching. Periods of high rainfall from November to June cause the hilly grasslands to erupt into life and the Birds of the Masai Mara: Adam Scott Kennedy | NHBS Book Shop

Mara Birds. The Mara holds an amazing selection of birds. Habitats include rivers, marshes, riparian forest, scrub & extensive grassland plains. The Mara birdlist exceeds 450 species & includes a large number of raptors amongst many other spectacular species BUT (there always is one!) we travelled to the Mara to see mammals not birds.

Despite this I did get a chance to photograph a number of Birds of the Masai Mara | BTO - British Trust for Ornithology

The Masai Mara is one of the most popular National Parks in Kenya, primarily because of the spectacular migration of Wildebeest which pass through around July to October.

However there are plenty of birds too. This book is a photographic guide to about 200 of them less than half of what you could see. They are arranged by habitat: plains, marsh and water, woodland and scrub, village
